

ABSTRACT

A level detector comprises an array of light emitting devices mounted in a line parallel to an array of light receiving devices, the arrays being 5 mounted within a housing capable of internally reflecting light from the emitting devices to respective receiving devices unless the respective parts of the level sensor are immersed in liquid. The outer internally-reflecting surface of the housing is preferable a continuous straight-line surface along the direction parallel to the arrays.